DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN PEARCE AND MEMBERS HIROZAWA
AND JOHNSON

On August 31, 2012, the Board issued a Decision and Order in this proceeding, which is reported at 358 NLRB No. 117. Thereafter, the General Counsel filed an application for enforcement in the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

At the time of the Decision and Order, the composition of the Board included two persons whose appointments to the Board had been challenged as constitutionally infirm. On June 26, 2014, the United States Supreme Court issued its decision in NLRB v. Noel Canning, 134 S.Ct. 2550 (2014), holding that the challenged appointments to the Board were not valid. Thereafter, the court of appeals vacated the Board's Decision and Order and remanded this case for further proceedings consistent with the Supreme Court's decision.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

In view of the decision of the Supreme Court in NLRB v. Noel Canning, supra, we have considered de novo the judge's decision and the record in light of the exceptions, cross-exceptions, and briefs. We have also considered the now-vacated Decision and Order, and we agree with the rationale set forth therein. Accordingly, we affirm the judge's rulings, findings,¹ and conclusions and adopt

¹ Contrary to our colleague, we agree with the judge that the Respondent unlawfully reduced the work assignments of Ceferino Urias Velasquez. In doing so, we observe that the Respondent unlawfully threatened to reduce employees' work assignments in retaliation for their Sec. 7 activity (in which Urias Velasquez engaged) of signing and presenting a group letter of protest to the Respondent's owner in early May 2010. Further, the Respondent clearly made good on that threat with respect to the three other employees: Efrain Gutierrez Najera, Primitivo Guzman, and Jose Urias. With respect to Urias Velasquez, comparing the months before and after the employees' protected activity, the evidence shows that he lost nearly 25 percent of his Saturday work assignments. For example, Urias Velasquez received 13 Saturday assignments over the 8 months immediately preceding the letter, but only 10 such assignments over the succeeding 8 months. He received two Saturday assignments in each of the 4 months prior to the letter but received two or more Saturday assignments in only one of the subsequent 8 months. This loss is consistent with the Respondent's retaliation against the other employees and is unexplained by legitimate business considerations. Our colleague states that Urias Velasquez' testimony is internally inconsistent. It is true that Urias Velasquez testified (Tr. 345) that there was no change in his work in May 2010. His testimony, however, suggests that he may not have understood the question to encompass the months following May; only a few questions later, Urias Velasquez testified (Tr. 346) that he began receiving fewer Saturday assignments and that they were instead given to less senior drivers who were hired after the presentation of the protest letter. Urias Velasquez' testimony as a whole is consistent with the judge's finding that more work opportunities were offered to newly hired and antiunion drivers at the expense of those drivers who had engaged in protected activity. We therefore affirm the judge's finding, with respect to all four employees, that the evidence supports an inference of retaliatory motive and that the Respondent failed to rebut that inference.

Member Johnson notes initially, in accord with the rationale of the prior Board decision, that the record does not establish that the Respondent consistently distributed Saturday work assignments equally among its employees or that drivers regularly worked an average of 2 Saturdays a month prior to the protected concerted protest letter signed by 11 prounion employees on April 20, 2010, and presented to the Respondent in early May. The Acting General Counsel therefore bore the burden to prove an adverse employment action—a reduction in work assignments—for each alleged discriminatee. He agrees with his colleagues that the burden was met with respect to Efrain Gutierrez Najera, Primitivo Guzman, and Jose Urias. However, he would find that, as with alleged discriminatees Enedino Millan and Jose Velasquez, the record does not sufficiently establish a reduction in Saturday work assignments for Ceferino Urias Velasquez. His own testimony on this matter was internally inconsistent and, as such, insufficient to prove actual loss. Thus, the more relevant evidence is the document showing Saturday work assignments made to him in 2009 and 2010. It is true that Urias Velasquez worked 2 Saturdays in each of the 4 months preceding the protest letter and a total of 13 assignments in the preceding 8 months, and that he worked only 1 Saturday in May and June as well as a total of 10 assignments in the 8 months following the protest letter. It is equally true, however, that Urias Velasquez did not work any Saturdays in 8 months of 2009, including June and July, and that he only worked multiple Saturdays in 2 months of that year. Further, after the protest letter Velasquez worked an unprecedented 4 Saturdays in July 2010, and thereafter he worked 1 Saturday in every month but September for the remainder of that year. In other words, he worked 10 Saturdays in the 8 months following presentation of the protest letter, but worked only 8 Saturdays for the same period in 2009. In light of this inconsistent pattern of monthly Saturday assignments, Member Johnson finds that the General Counsel has failed to meet his burden of showing that Urias Velasquez actually lost work. Accordingly, Member Johnson would dismiss the complaint allegation with respect to him. See Simmons Co., 314 NLRB 717, 725 (1994) ("There is no evidence of any adverse action taken by the employer . . . and thus no prima facie case."). For the sole reason of the absence of exceptions, Member Johnson also would uphold the special remedies imposed by the judge.

² The Decision and Order reported at 358 NLRB No. 117 inadvertently stated that the employees' protest letter was presented in early May 2009. It was presented in early May 2010.

³ We shall modify the judge's recommended Order in accordance our recent decision in Don Chavas, LLC d/b/a Tortillas Don Chavas, 361 NLRB No. 10 (2014). We shall substitute a new notice to conform
